

Western Undergraduate Economics Review

Inside this issue:	Recognizing Leadership, Dedication & Perseverance
Hawtrey and Robertson: A comparison of Their Views on Monetary Factors in the Business Cycle Jim Dinning 1	Welcome to the Western Undergraduate Economics Review. In the fall of the year 2000, an Honors Economics student envisioned a journal that would honor Western's economics faculty and department. The journal itself is dedicated to the students of the Department of Economics at The University of Western Ontario, which offers one of the most prestigious economics undergraduate degrees in North America. The main objective of the Review is to recognize the work of economics students by publishing their papers. The works published in the Review were selected based on their originality, quality, and academic merit. It is the hope that this journal will continue to grow and expand for future generations. Many professors, students, and staff worked to build and expand the Department of Economics so it may take its place amongst the best Universities in the world. Acknowledgments Special appreciation goes to Melissa Broadfoot (Undergraduate Coordinator in Economics) for her continued guidance. Special thanks also goes to Leslie Farrant for her help in putting this edition together. The continued support from the Social Science Student Levy makes this enterprise possible. Without all of these contributions, the WUER would not be a reality.
How Does Trade Liberalization Affect the Poor? Olga Timoshenko 5
The Failure of Crown Run Electricity in Ontario Cavin Morton 15
Zimbabwe and South Africa: Comparisons and Recommendations Aaron Collins 28
Edition Editor: Jordan Fletcher	